Passion and Vision: I believe a lot of people are trying to live out what I would call the modern day tragedy. I would define the modern day tragedy as becoming successful at all the things that really don't matter.

If that is true, then we have to define what really matters in life.

To me the answer to that question is simple, RELATIONSHIPS. For me the most important relationship in my life is my relationship with my heavenly Father and his precious Son, who is my Savior and Lord of my life. My second most important is my relationship with my wonderful wife who has such a giving spirit and is also my best friend.

I see myself as a loving, kind, gentle, loyal, patient, positive and grateful person. I am grateful for my parents who are both in heaven now with the Lord. They taught me what I believe are the two most important lessons in life that you can teach any child.

They taught me about the Lord who is a good and loving God who loves me. They also taught and showed me what it means to be unconditionally loved.

I believe God called and gifted me to do Christian counseling. It is an honor and privilege to be trusted by each client who comes to see me. I never take that privilege and trust for granted. I believe God gave me my mission statement in life three decades ago which I keep in my planner and read regularly,

“I will spend my life mending broken hearts”.

With God's help I work to live out this mission everyday.

Although we all have challenges and difficulties in life, I can honestly say I have no complaints. I am so thankful and I feel truly blessed.

Clinical Experience: I have worked over 28 years in a combination of hospital inpatient services, hospital partial hospitalization/day treatment services and now eighteen years clinic outpatient services.
